Arctowski

A story lasting over 130 years, beginning with the Belgica expedition (1897-1899), the first to winter in Antarctic ice. Its scientific leader was 26-year-old Polish Henryk Arctowski. This experience changed his life forever.

In 1897, the ship Belgica sails from Antwerp to Antarctica with an international crew, including future South Pole conqueror Amundsen, Romanian zoologist Racovitza, American Cook, and two Poles: Arctowski and Antoni Dobrowolski. Through voiceover readings of Arctowski's diaries, we learn about his journey and how he joined the expedition. The film focuses on the Belgica's struggle as the crew is trapped in ice for over a year. How did they survive? What happened to them? Did everyone make it? Animated scenes show desperate escape attempts, while disease, darkness, and a plague of rats drive the crew toward madness. The film also includes documentary footage of the reconstruction of the Polish Antarctic station, fulfilling Arctowski's dreams. Through archival materials, animation (using the unique under-camera scattering technique), and interviews with "people of Antarctica" and descendants of the Belgica crew, we explore human endurance and the connection to Antarctica.

Sandro

While seeking a breakthrough as a non-binary artist in a male-dominated Hip-Hop scene Sandro, an activist from the impoverished Comuna 13 district of Medellin, still grapples with the aftermath of their brother's murder.

Even 20 years later Sandro still deals with the consequences of their brother's murder. Juan, Sandro's sole friend and confidant, was killed for his refusal to join a local gang. This event led Sandro down a path of vengeance and criminal activities, resulting in their incarceration. While in prison, Sandro underwent a profound transformation and decided to redeem themselves through artistic expression. They resumed writing HipHop lyrics, a skill passed down from their late brother. We'll follow Sandro as they navigate the harsh realities of being an ex-convict, trying to help their community, and seeking a breakthrough as a non-binary artist in a male-dominated Hip-Hop scene. Their attempts to move on with their life, amplified by their unique circumstances, will resonate with viewers on a universal level. While Sandro's metamorphosis may not be fully realised, their experiences will offer valuable insights into the obstacles that hinder the pursuit of a meaningful and fulfilling life.

The Tuner

It is a story about people who eternally stand in the shadow, piano tuners who fight to have their instrument played by the future winner of the Chopin Competition.

It is 3 a.m. Mid-October. For the last two hours, there has been no one at the National Philharmonic in Warsaw except the janitor and a group of men dressed in suits and white flannel slippers. They are the tuners. In the centre of the Concert Hall's stage, one of them plays several notes every now and then, which sound differently in different parts of the hall. All that can be heard is silence and three sounds that reverberate against the walls. Crunch, a slight turn of the key and again a slow passage. The same, but different. More subtle. The piano tuners prepare the instrument for the morning's selection of participants in the Competition. Every piano that is on stage is great. However, simply perfecting the precision of its tuning may not be enough. You have to give something more from yourself so that the piano captivates with its colour. There are many participants, and pleasing everyone is rather impossible. The dream of this tuner is for his piano to be selected by the winner of the competition.

Theory of Survival

The indomitable palaeontologist Zofia Kielan-Jaworowska and her team discover the first dinosaur and mammal fossils in Mongolia.

Prof. Zofia Kielan-Jaworowska is certainly one of the most eminent palaeontologists in the world, and her 8-year series of expeditions to the Gobi Desert was groundbreaking in broadening our knowledge of mammals and dinosaurs. Steven Spielberg himself, when looking for a consultant with the greatest expertise on dinosaurs for the filming of Jurassic Park, chose her.

In order to evoke memories of past journeys as faithfully as possible, a significant part of the film will consist of archival audiovisual materials. This film is the story of a woman full of passion and curiosity for the world, for the history of Earth. A woman who survived escaping from the train to concentration camp and as a nurse during the Warsaw Uprising. A woman who discovered how mammals survived climate catastrophe 66 millions years ago. Maybe this will give us an answer how we can survive today.

Victory Day

Dmytro, a young Ukrainian from the Donetsk region, came to Svalbard in search of a livelihood. In Barentsburg, a Russian enclave on the Arctic island, he took a job in a coal mine on a two-year contract.

Svalbard, and in particular its largest island – Spitsbergen – is an amalgam of languages, and cultures, concentrated in just a few settlements. The islands are harsh and inhospitable to humans: icy winds rush through frozen hills and valleys, avalanches occur regularly, while anyone venturing beyond human settlements must be mindful of polar bears. In Barentsburg, a settlement built to serve a Soviet-era coal mine, two nationalities dominate: Russians and Ukrainians, usually employed on two-year contracts. The film's subject will be the relationship between these two groups: people who, despite the ongoing war, are forced to cooperate in the unforgiving reality of the Arctic Ocean. The Ukrainian community on Spitsbergen tries to keep a distance from their Russian coworkers, avoiding unnecessary conflicts. However, it is becoming increasingly difficult to ignore signs of Russian nationalism, especially during the annual parade organized to commemorate Russia's Victory Day.
