Child of Dust

After a lifetime of longing, Sang, an unwanted child from the Vietnam War, finally meets his newly found father in the U.S., leaving his beloved family behind — but nothing goes as expected.

Sang is one of countless children left behind by American soldiers after the Vietnam War — unwanted, discriminated against, and scarred by a war that took more than just his father. When Sang unexpectedly locates his gravely ill father in the U.S., he becomes determined to meet him, even though it comes at a price. The only way to fulfill this need is to move to the U.S. permanently, leaving behind his beloved wife, daughter, and grandson. In this foreign land, he struggles to find his place — not only in a society that sees him as an outsider but also within an American family that never knew of his existence. Cultural barriers and unspoken pain collide when the past catches up with the present.

December

The arrival of December destroys current order. With snow and frost, it brings to Europe travelers who are not offered any gifts or welcome. A battle between empathy and indifference ensues.

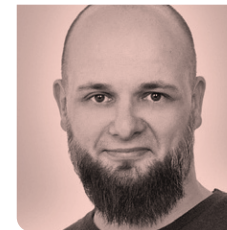

December brings exceptional spells of cold and snowfall to Europe. The existing order is destroyed not only by the harsh weather, but also by 'strangers' who want to get into the territory of the European Union. Some people try to live as if nothing has changed and get ready for approaching Christmas. Others join the battle and, depending on their views, they either fight with the 'strangers' or try to save their lives. This is December: a documentary manifesto made up of a number of mini stories set somewhere between empathy and indifference. Thirty-one autonomous chapters, create a mosaic that is a mirror image of ourselves. December is a creative documentary which focuses on the contemporary perception of migrants from the Middle East and Africa. People's indifference is juxtaposed with hostility and empathy, creating a tapestry of modern European society. The month of December it is a harbinger of winter, not only in literal terms. Might be also associated with tragedies related to the migrant crisis as well as the 'coldness' symbolizing the lack of sympathy towards refugees. Significantly, December is the month when Christian feast celebrating the birth of Jesus is held, it is a period dedicated to helping people in need. This is why we chose December, along with its unique narrative arc, to found the structure of the film upon: thirty-one chapters plus the key days as milestones. The film consists of a patchwork of scenes that differ in both the message and form. Poetic impressions are intertwined with amateur phone footage and 'conventional' observational scenes. Each scene is usually an autonomous mini story. Additionally, main plots, such as the progress of destructive winter, activists fighting and speaking up for migrants, the struggle of the refugees, or Christmas preparations, are continued or reflected in a contrasting or symbolic manner in other, seemingly different scenes.

Home Movie

Anu is a transmasculine director. But when he visits his family he shaves off mustache and plays the role of beloved daughter and sister, Anna. By filming his family he hopes to overcome the fear of coming-out, longing to restore authentic ties.

Anu is a first Polish transgender person to perform in the theater and TV. However, out of a fear of rejection, he also performs in front of his family, pretending he's still a girl and that his transition never happened. This bourgeois performance continues uninterrupted during family celebrations and communal holidays. In this setup, everyone has a role with which they can hardly leave. The narcissistic father communicates to the world with his poems. The elegant mother spreads an aura of care and tries to hide the anguish of domestic duties. Older brothers, Romek (36) and Rafał (50) both live with their parents. Rafał, is a 5-year-old boy trapped in an aging body. He suffers from cerebral palsy but is actually the only one in the family who dares to tell the truth. To break the silence, Anu settles his documentary camera into the Czerwiński family's row house in Poznań. It is with its help that the director tries to shatter the system of silence that has always organised life in his home. But even if the family is ready to transition together, they still need to play the final act. Poland has one of the most cruel yet most absurd gender reassignment procedures in the world. An adult trans person who wants to legally transition must sue their parents in court. The trial takes place in front of a judge and pits family members against each other. The final act of Home Movie will take place in the courtroom. After years of silence, will his family support Anu's right to become his true self?

On the Way

Amid the serene beauty of the Polish mountains, an asphalt road leads to a breathtaking yet heavily overcrowded lake. Every day, thousands of tourists tread the same narrow asphalt path, much to nature's dismay. How far can you be from nature while trying to be in the middle of it?

On a summer day over 15,000 people converge on Morskie Oko ('Eye of the Sea'), a glacial lake in the Polish Tatra Mountains, drawing crowds akin to those at a packed football stadium. Known as the most popular hike in Poland, the journey spans 8 km on an asphalt road designed for easy access, taking around two hours to complete. Horse-drawn carriages offer an easyway up for those unmotivated to walk, while the path is lined with food stalls and souvenir shops. This sets a stark contrast between the tourists, the unspoiled wilderness, and the destination — Eye of the Sea, one of Europe's most stunning lakes and the focal point of our story. The film's dramatic engine sets off with a seemingly harmless vibe of selfies and holidays, where nature is barely noticeable amid the asphalt and noise of the crowds. However, harsh environmental conditions and unpredictable weather introduce a growing sense of danger. This tension escalates through innovative sound design and editing, creating an abstract feeling of imminent threat. The film ultimately resolves this catastrophic atmosphere, leaving viewers both hopeful and aware of the need for action. The film's narrative revolves around three character types: locals and scientists, the lake itself, and tourists. The locals and scientists, like Mr. Grzegorz who collects trash daily and a limnologist studying water changes, serve as the story's anchor, highlighting their dedication to preserving the lake. Tourists, each with their own reasons for visiting Eye of the Sea, offer brief contrasting microstories. Through these perspectives, global issues such as mass tourism, environmental challenges, and climate change become visible. The film will be a cinematic journey exploring the modern face of tourism and humanity's complex relationship with nature. Set across changing seasons, the film uses a mountain trail as a microcosm to examine human impact on the environment and more mindful ways to engage with nature amid the climate crisis.
